KFC Chicken Supplier Fined $1.4 Million After Two Employees Maimed at Work

It turns out that KFC's chicken legs might have required the sacrifice of a human leg. According to BuzzFeed, Case Farms — a large North Carolina-based poultry supplier that sells to companies like KFC — is facing over $1.4 million in fines. This is due to employees losing limbs while on the job at the company's Ohio processing facility. READ MORE

USMWF’S HIGHLIGHT OF THE WEEK!!!

Loren Boller, 23

—He was inside the tank area checking for weld strength. They pumped air into the bulkhead between the two tanks to check for weld leakage. The bulkhead gave way and he was killed instantly. We were told that there was only to have been like 9 psi of air pressure to test, the line feeding it would hold over 300 psi, and the regulator gauge was faulty, they did not know how much pressure there had been.

Son remembers contract worker killed in fall at TVA
CHATTANOOGA, TN (WRCB) -UPDATE: Eddie Morgan remembers his dad, Edwin Morgan, who went by Earl, as a hardworking man that was good at his craft.

“He didn’t care if it took him a little bit longer to do it as long as it got done right,” Eddie said, “He said if anything was worth doing, it was worth doing right and made sure he did it the way he was taught to do it by his dad and other construction workers that he worked with throughout the years.”

Electrical Safety

Ohio is one of 24 states where deaths on the job increased last year from the year before, according to newly updated state and federal data.

There were 184 work-related fatalities across all occupations statewide in 2014, compared to 149 the year before, according to Ohio Department of Health, which tracks the state-level statistics in partnership with the federal government.

Overall, 4,679 fatal work injuries in all private and public sectors were recorded in the United States in 2014. That grew 2 percent from the 4,585 deaths that occurred in 2013, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

But when adjusted for the number of workers and hours — taking into account total U.S. employment grew approximately 1 percent in 2014 from 2013 — the death rate remained unchanged; there were about 3 deaths for every 100,000 workers in each of the last two years, according to the federal labor department.

“Far too many people are still killed on the job — 13 workers every day taken from their families tragically and unnecessarily,” said Thomas Perez, U.S. secretary of labor, in a written statement. “These numbers underscore the urgent need for employers to provide a safe workplace for their employees as the law requires.”

Deaths in what can be dangerous manufacturing and construction industries are on the rise both locally and nationally as employment in those sectors recovers from the economic downturn, according to the estimates.

TESIMONIAL:
I lost my brother simply because fixing a dangerous boiler was in CVR’s 5 year plan. Yet that boiler had been in operation since 1959. We lost a great man because they didn’t want to spend the money to fix it. There should be no acceptable risk in the workplace. Russell Mann 1967-2012.
